Before & After Lunch | Power Poetry

Lesson based on a poem: After the Lunch. Poems are a wonderful way of developing the students' general skills as well as improving their pronunciations, stress and intonation. They are particularly welcome at the end of the week, on Friday, towards the end of the morning, or perhaps the afternoon. If students are in intensive academic writing programmes poems are probably not going to be appropriate but for most other programmes they can provide excellent practice, lead to a significant ...

After – Poetry Daily

And after noon the well-dressed creatures come. To sniff among the dead. And have their lunch. And all the many well-dressed creatures pluck. The swollen avocados from the dust. And stir the minestrone with stray bones. And after lunch. They loll and lounge about. Decanting claret in convenient skulls.

After The Lunch Poem by Wendy Cope - Poem Hunter

Poem after poem is of a high order of achievement--"Rhapsody," "Adieu to Norman, Bon Jour to Joan and Jean-Paul," "Joe's Jacket," "You Are Gorgeous and I'm Coming," and "Personal Poem." These are all poems with the identifying characteristics of an O'Hara poem, all the same quick-stepping, name-dropping, vivacious, uninhibited narrator (name-dropping because he is utterly at home in his surroundings and in the poem).

' After the Lunch ' Themes. As part of the theme of love present with all poems in the ' Love Poetry through the Ages ' Anthology, ' After the Lunch ' specifically looks at the theme of romance and falling in love. It is also interesting to consider how the poem could link to the idea of young or juvenile love, due to the buoyant and happy nature of the poem, yet at the same time the effort to restrict and limit these emotions may suggest that the speaker is older

After Lunch Poem by Bai Juyi - Poem Hunter
After lunch I saw it in a different light, like a thing emerging from behind a fever bush, something reaching the senses with the smell of seaweed boiling, and as visible as yellow snowdrops on black earth.
